In a balanced approach to literacy, teachers integrate instruction with authentic reading and writing experiences. The goal of the Audit is to determine the current reality of the building, provide teachers with the necessary resources and support to improve the universal tier of literacy instruction. The process begins with the completion of the audit to identify strengths and areas for growth followed by a plan of action written by the lead team. Accompanying The Balanced Literacy Audit is a rubric for decision making and supportive resources. The Literacy Team is piloting this project with North Union at Swea City.

So if children are such natural learners, why do so many of them struggle at school? 2). Why are so many bored by the whole process? 3). "Too many students think they are the problem, that they are not really intelligent, or must have difficulties in learning." What do you think of this statement? 4). "Personalization means teachers taking account of these differences in how they teach different students. It also means allowing for flexibility within the curriculum so that in addition to what all students need to learn in common, there are opportunities for them to pursue their individual interests and strengths as well." Do you believe this? How might we model this at the AEA level?
